Orchard, however, said, 'How do I know you are McParland, and not some cheap detective they have sent here?" McParland said he did not know how he could satisfy him of his identity. Suddenly Orchard, noticing that McParland wore an Elks' badge, said that if he were an Elk he would carry a card of identification. McParland said yes, that was so, and at once produced his card, and Orchard would have the guard taken away. On consultation with the Governor this was done, and Orchard had the first good night's sleep that he had had since he was put in the cell.
